Library Of Congress Receives Rare Constitutional Convention Document

One of only four known copies of a call to the constitutional convention which was sent to each of the thirteen states in February 1787 was given to the Library of Congress on February 20 by Mr. and Mrs. William Randolph Hearst, Jr.

The document was formally presented on behalf of the Hearsts by former Chief Justice of the United States Warren E. Burger to Librarian of Congress Daniel J. Boorstin at a dinner in the Library's Madison Hall. Mrs. Hearst also publicly expressed her pleasure at having the document in the Library's collections. Constitutional historian James H. Hutson, chief of the Library's Manuscript Division, described how the document would fit into the collections relating to the Constitution. The call to convention will be displayed in a major exhibition, "The American Solution: Origins of the United States Constitution," which will open May 14 at the Library of Congress.

The first efforts to convene a constitutional convention began with the Annapolis Convention, an extra-legal body, which on September 14, 1786, issued an invitation to the 13 states to send delegates to Philadelphia on the second Monday in May 1787 to devise plans "to render the Constitution of the Federal Government adequate to the exigencies of the Union." Seven states responded favorably but New York and the New England states were reluctant to appoint delegates until the call was approved by Congress. On February 21, 1787, Congress endorsed the call for the convention in Philadelphia, and the written copies inviting states to send their delegates were signed by Charles Thomson, and sent to the chief executives of each of the 13 states. By May 14, four more states appointed delegates, assuring that an adequate representation would be present to permit the great work of constitution-making to begin, as it did on May 25, 1787, the day on which a quorum of the states was obtained.

The copy of the call to convention given to the Library was discovered among the Hearst papers in New York City by Maury A. Bromsen, Boston dealer in rare books, manuscripts, and fine arts, who had worked with the Hearst papers over a period of many years.

Library Publishes SNI Protocol Document

Standard Network Interconnection Protocols is now available. SNI Protocols contains the specifications for the computer-communication protocols of the Standard Network Interconnection. SNI is the intersystem-communication component of the Linked Systems Project (LSP).

LSP is a nationwide library networking project to link bibliographic databases. SNI supports intersystem communication for LSP, and is intended to support the linking of library automation systems in general for all types of intersystem library applications, and for all types of computer systems.

Computers of different types are generally not able to communicate with one another. The SNI protocols specify standard procedures and formats for computer communication so that library automation systems can exchange bibliographic information, regardless of the type of computer system.

To date, four organizations have completed implementation of the SNI protocols on their computer systems. They are: the Library of Congress, the Research Libraries Group, Inc., OCLC, and Geac Computers. These four organizations, which have quite different computer configurations, are able to share bibliographic information by virtue of having implemented the SNI protocols. Several other organizations are in various stages of planning for implementation of these protocols. They include vendors of library automation systems, university libraries, government agencies, bibliographic utilities, and regional library networks. For those who implement the SNI protocols, conformance testing is available, using the SNI Test Facility of the Library of Congress.

The SNI protocols are based on international standards for computer communication. Specifically, they are based on the Open Systems Interconnection (OSI) Reference Model of the International Standards Organization (ISO). The OSI model specifies seven "layers" of protocol. Layers one through six pertain to application-independent matters such as telecommunications, synchronization of data transfer, and representation of information. Layer seven is "application specific" which means that different layer-seven protocols are used for different applications. SNI uses the ISO standard (or draft standard) protocols for layers one through six. At layer seven, the SNI protocols for the existing LSP applications have been developed by the LSP participants. SNI is intended not only to support current LSP applications, but all future library networking applications. The advantage of OSI layering is that as new applications are added (or existing applications modified) in the future, it will usually be necessary to change only the top OSI layer.

For information about the Linked Systems Project, the Standard Network Interconnection, or the SNI Test Facility, contact the Network Development and MARC Standards Office, Processing Services, Library of Congress, Washington, DC 20540.

The current version of SNI Protocols is dated July 1, 1986, and supersedes the previous version dated October 1, 1984. SNI Protocols (ISBN 0-8444-552-3) can be obtained for $25 from the Customer Services Section, Cataloging Distribution Service, Processing Services, Library of Congress, Washington, DC 20541.

Library Issues Cataloging Rules for the Description of Looseleaf Publications

A new handbook, Cataloging Rules for the Description of Looseleaf Publications, is available from the Cataloging Distribution Service. It supplements the Anglo-American Cataloguing Rules, 2nd edition, and focuses on looseleaf publications that are constantly being updated.

Looseleaf publications present special problems for librarians. The chief source of bibliographic information frequently changes as updates are issued. The changing nature of title pages, binders, etc., is complicated also by the fact that methods of updating vary from publisher to publisher. Often new title pages are issued, creating the problem of how to handle different bibliographic information on old and new title pages. These changing data offer a constant challenge to the cataloger.

Rules for dealing with these problems and with a number of related ones are addressed in Cataloging Rules for the Description of Looseleaf Publications. Law librarians especially will find it helpful, because much of the text and many of the examples included are keyed to legal publications that are in looseleaf form. Any librarian, however, who catalogs looseleaf publications will find the handbook a useful tool.

Cataloging Rules for the Description of Looseleaf Publications may be ordered from the Customer Support Unit, Cataloging Distribution Service, Library of Congress, Washington, DC 20541, at $15 a copy.
